New Assam Rhino Reserve opens May 5—look out for rhinos! Special exhibition puts spotlight on global and local wildlife trafficking

WHAT: Join Woodland Park Zoo in celebrating rhinos, turtles and cranes at the opening of Assam Rhino Reserve on May 5. And, meet the star attractions in the new special exhibition: rhinos Taj and Glenn.

Assam Rhino Reserve will showcase greater one-horned rhinos, Asian brown tortoises and demoiselle cranes. Rhinos are iconic symbols of the wildlife trafficking crisis. The exhibit will highlight the amazing adaptations of these three species and bring to life the impact of poaching, the illegal wildlife trade and the turtle extinction crisis. Trafficking issues happening right here in Puget Sound also will be addressed such as black bear, elk, sturgeon and even the little-known sea cucumber.

Rhinos Taj and Glenn, both males, are newcomers to the zoo and mark the first time rhinoceros will live at Woodland Park Zoo in its 118-year history. Pronounced like Taj Mahal, Taj means “crown” or “jewel” in Hindi. He was born Nov. 10, 2016 at San Diego Zoo Safari Park and is the 70th greater one-horned rhino born at the Safari Park since 1972, making the Park the foremost breeding facility in the world for this rhino species. Glenn was born a day apart from Taj on Nov. 11, 2016 at The Wilds, a 10,000-acre conservation center and safari park located in Cumberland, Ohio and operated by the Columbus Zoo and Aquarium. He was named in honor of the late astronaut and Senator John Glenn, who was a dear friend of the Ohio conservation organization.

Zoo guests will see many natural behaviors of this water-loving species including wallowing in mud, grazing on land, immersing in a shallow pool and nibbling on aquatic plants along the edge of the pool. For an additional fee, up-close encounters with the rhinos will be offered throughout the summer.

Grand opening day activities will include rhino keeper talks, free rhino stickers, a new costumed rhino mascot, raptor flight programs, and a variety of animal care keeper talks and activities throughout the zoo and in Zoomazium.
