

ZooTunes concert series canceled for 2020

Zoo announces additional event cancellations

SEATTLE— Given the circumstances of the times, Woodland Park Zoo has made the decision to cancel the ZooTunes summer concert series for 2020.

Though ZooTunes has been a Seattle staple for 37 years, the zoo is optimistic that the collective efforts of the community are helping to flatten the curve, and that everyone can rock and roar together again in 2021.

To everyone that has already purchased tickets for Blondie: thank you for supporting the zoo! The zoo will be in touch by email soon with next steps.

Woodland Park Zoo is so grateful to you for making ZooTunes part of your summer tradition. With all of the concerts and competition in Seattle, you've chosen to come back to ZooTunes each year for music on the meadow because you care about your zoo and its wonderful animals.

This year, more than ever, Woodland Park Zoo needs your support. Since closing its doors in March, the zoo has lost millions of dollars in critical funds. The zoo is heartened by the generosity of this community, who has rallied to help the zoo continue its vital animal care work.

If you are able to make a financial contribution of any size, please visit www.zoo.org/relief or consider joining or renewing your zoo membership.

Additional cancellations:

Please note, Woodland Park Zoo has made the difficult decision to also cancel the following events for 2020:

- April 11 – Bunny Bounce
- July 24 – Tasting Flight
- August 21 – WildBites
- Summer 2020 – All summer camps and classes

The zoo remains temporarily closed following state recommendations to help slow the spread of coronavirus. Get updates at www.zoo.org/health.
