

Sweet, sweet sustainability: pick Halloween candy that doesn't hurt wildlife

SEATTLE — It's conservation through candy! This Halloween, you have the power to help protect forest habitats and the animals that call them home. All you have to do is select treats that source palm oil sustainably.

No guess work needed: Check out this "Candy With a Cause" list for a roundup of all the companies committed to using certified sustainable palm oil. From Butterfinger to Jolly Ranchers, you'll likely be pleasantly surprised to see your favorites on the list!

Why Non-Sustainable Palm Oil Isn't So Sweet

Palm oil is an edible vegetable oil consumed all over the world, but its booming consumption has come at the expense of the tropical forests that orangutans, tigers and elephants call home. This versatile oil is here to stay, so we must demand better of its production and consumption in order for it to be sustainable. Learn more at zoo.org/palmoil.

Batu and Godek Want you to Choose Candy With a Cause!

Confident, intelligent Batu and gentle, playful Godek are two of the cutest orangutans around. One look at their sweet faces shows exactly why we need to protect this species and all of the other wildlife threatened by unsustainable palm oil production.

Help Hornbills This Halloween!

These beautiful birds also need your help. Why not go above and boo-yond and adopt a nest! In addition to unsustainable palm oil production, hornbills are also threatened by poachers and the illegal pet trade. Adopt a nest today and treat hornbills to a brighter future.

Woodland Park Zoo offers a safe, outdoor experience for all. Go to zoo.org/visit for the latest information on the zoo's face covering policy. Visit today and save 30% off summertime admission prices!

Zoo hours through April 30: 9:30 a.m.– 4:00 p.m.

For more information on Woodland Park Zoo, visit www.zoo.org and follow the zoo on Facebook, Twitter and Instagram.

###