

Video: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=u3VmRhDfw8Y>

CUTENESS ALERT: Update on Zoo's Rescued Brown Bear Cub

SEATTLE—Woodland Park Zoo's new brown bear cub is beating the heat with an ice treat in a kiddie pool! The female cub was recently rescued from Anchorage, Alaska where she was found without her mom. The zoo, who has the expertise and facility, is providing a permanent home for her.

The cub, who remains nameless and is 6 months old, is temporarily living off public view while she settles in. She's learning her new routine well and learning the cues from the bear keepers. She's currently eating protein, kibble, greens, an assortment of fruits and veggies and formula from a bowl. As she grows, she'll be transitioned off formula and to a seasonal diet. She currently weighs approximately 100 pounds.

Stay tuned for more updates on the cub at: www.zoo.org/brownbear.

And, show the zoo your favorite #IAMLivingNorthwest moment! You might see your post appear on the zoo's new screen in Living Northwest Trail and you'll also be entered to win a family six-pack of WildLanterns tickets.

How to enter: Post a photo of your time in nature (such as your favorite summer nature escape) and tell the zoo how you are Living Northwest! Use the tag and post on your preferred social media platform (Facebook, Instagram or Twitter) between August 1, and October 31, 2022 and you'll be entered to win. Winner will be announced shortly after October 31.